

Andrew Pereira

VICE PRESIDENT

Andrew Pereira, who joined CommPac as a vice president in January 2020, has extensive experience as both a communications professional and an award-winning journalist.

Pereira serves as the lead on several accounts, providing strategic counsel, planning and implementation of various external initiatives on behalf of CommPac's clients.

During his four years working with the City and County of Honolulu, Pereira was the director of communications, advising city leadership and department heads on media and communications strategies, policy advisement, crisis management, media training, community affairs, and media outreach.

Prior to working with the City and County, Pereira was an award-winning investigative reporter at KITV and KHON2.

Throughout his career, Pereira has earned some of the industry's highest honors, including the prestigious Edward R. Murrow Award. He also was honored by the Society of Professional Journalists, nominated for two Emmy Awards, and named the recipient of the George Mason Outstanding Business Reporting Award.

In 2015, Pereira was named the best political reporter on Hawai'i television by Chris Cillizza of The Washington Post blog The Fix.

Prior to working as a reporter, he served as executive producer of KHNL's morning news program.
